Nino and Caterina have been married for sixty-five years and they deeply love each other from the first moment they met. On the death of Caterina, their daughter tries to help Nino to overcome the loss of the woman he loved all his life. So, she hires Amicangelo, an editor with ambitions of a novelist, to write a book on her father's memories. Amicangelo is forced to accept the job only for economic reasons but he soon collides with the strong personality of Nino. The initial problematic relationship between the two men will gradually evolve into a sincere friendship.
